Food Banks Need Our Help in Responding to Hunger

- *According to the USDA, food insecurity increased by 6 percent in 2023. That is 1 in 7 adults and 1 in 5 children suffer from hunger.
- *The recent inflation has increased food insecurity among families with children and communities of color.
- *Every community in the country is home to families who face hunger. But rural communities are especially hard hit.
- *Many households that experience food insecurity do not qualify for federal nutrition programs and visit their local food banks and other food programs for extra support.
- *In 2024, over 47 million people were living in food insecure house-holds, the highest rate since 2014.
- *Over 750,000 Oregonians saw drastic cuts to grocery budgets and many of these families showed up at food assistance sites.
- *It doesn't take a big commitment to make a big impact towards solving the hunger problem in America.
- *Donate to your local food bank or become a volunteer. Let's work together to solve food insecurity in America and provide everyone with the opportunity to avoid going hungry.

National flood insurance program paused during federal shutdown

SALEM - The Oregon Division of Financial Regulation (DFR) is alerting consumers that the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) is currently paused due to the federal government shutdown. The congressional authorization for the program lapsed, which is affecting policyholders trying to renew coverage and people buying homes across the country, including Oregon.

DFR wants to make sure Oregonians understand how this may affect them, what steps to take, and provide resources. During the federal government shutdown:

No new or renewed NFIP policies. NFIP cannot issue new policies or renew existing ones until Congress reauthorizes the program.

Current NFIP policies stay active. If you already have a flood insurance policy through NFIP, it will stay in effect until its expiration date.

but delays are possible. NFIP will continue paying claims with the funds it has on hand.

Claims may still be paid,

If those funds run out during the shutdown, payments could be delayed.

Some home sales could be delayed. If you are buying a home in a high-risk flood area, flood insurance is usually required for federally backed loans. Without access to NFIP policies, closings may be postponed until the program resumes.

Private flood insurance may be an option. Some private insurance companies offer flood policies. These can provide coverage during the NFIP lapse.

Check your policy. If your flood insurance renewal is approaching or your application is pending, immediately contact your insurance agent to learn about your options.

If you are buying a home in a flood zone, be aware. Let your real-estate agent, lender, and insurance agent know about NFIP's pause. You may need to explore private flood insurance to keep your closing on track.

Ask about private options. Some insurance companies can provide flood coverage through the private market. Talk to your agent to compare coverage and costs.

Keep your coverage current. If you already have NFIP coverage, continue making your payments and keep your documents handy. Your policy remains valid until it expires.

Stay informed. Once Congress reauthorizes NFIP, new and renewal policies will start again. For the latest information, it is always best to talk to your insurance agent.

"While we hope Congress acts quickly to restart the NFIP, this reminds us how important it is to be prepared for flooding and to know your insurance options," said TK Keen, Oregon's acting insurance commissioner. "If you have questions or problems, our advocates are ready to help."

Offbeat Oregon History

Cockiness, incompetence and a labor strike led to deadly shipwreck

By Finn J.D. John

Back in the 1920s, labor action on the waterfront was a notoriously violent thing. Strikers and strikebreakers, goon squads and "Special Policemen," hard-punching union longshoremen and hard-charging shipping magnates, all made for plenty of black eyes, bloody noses and even whizzing bullets when the two sides locked horns on the decks and wharfs. By those standards, the International Seamen's Union strike of 1921 was a mild affair. It kicked off on May 1 and barely lasted two months. In retrospect, the union was crazy for picking that particular time to strike. The market was flooded with unemployed seamen laid off after the First World War, and there was a recession on, so many of them were desperate for work. Breaking the strike was easy: The owners simply opened a new non-union hiring hall, staffed all the vacant positions, and were back up and running in a week or two. After that, the union was broken, and it was simply a matter of waiting for them to give up and admit defeat.

The strike may have generated a few fistfights, but no strikers or strikebreakers were killed or even badly hurt.

But if you asked certain people in early August, a few weeks after the strike was settled, they'd tell you there were people killed as a result of it. There were, they'd assure you, at least 42 of them, drowned or burned or blown apart as a direct result of that strike — although they'd admit they couldn't prove any-

You see, when the strike broke out, the companies had hired whoever was available for open positions as strikebreakers. These strikebreakers were rewarded by being kept on in their positions after the union was broken — as seemed only fair; after all, no union would hire them after they'd been "scabs." But all of them were rookies; many may have been crew members on ships during the war, but all were brand-new to the ships they were on now, and there were no seasoned veterans to help them get acclimated. Some of them had served on sailing ships during the war and didn't know their way around a steamer. Others had been longshoremen or coal-heavers and were now trying to learn more complex jobs. And still others of them were just not very competent at anything, and would never have been considered for their jobs had the companies not been desperate to break the strike. Together they made for ship crews that were barely adequate at the best of times — and worse than inadequate at the worst.

The evidence for this viewpoint is circumstantial, but pretty strong nonetheless. And it has a name: The S.S.

The Alaska was a 3,700ton iron passenger liner, 327 feet long, built in 1889 in Pennsylvania. She had been reliably making the Portland-San Francisco-Los Angeles run for about a decade for the San Francisco and Portland Steamship Company. But, until the strike, she had always been operated by a competent crew of veteran seamen. On her final run, the Alaska left Portland on Aug. 5, 1921, just a week or two after the strike was settled. According to passenger Edgar Horner, it became clear pretty early on that her crew was green as grass.

"It seemed to me at the time that they had a lot of inexperienced men aboard, young kids who couldn't handle the ropes, etc., and they had a difficult time trying to dock the ship at Astoria to take on more passengers and freight," Horner wrote in a long letter to his family a week or so later. "When they cast loose to leave, they tore away several feet of the bulwarks on the forward part of the portside boat deck, and the ship swung in on the stern and struck the dock, tearing off some planking and piles."

It wasn't exactly a good omen for the voyage. But Horner thought little of it at the time.

He recalled it vividly about 24 hours later, though, when — while charging blindly along through a thick fog at her maximum speed of 15 knots — the Alaska abruptly slammed into one of the rocks that extend out from Cape Mendocino in northern California.

When this happened, Horner was in the social hall on the main deck. "I could feel the plates being ripped off the bottom," he wrote. "It left no question in my mind what was the matter."

Immediately the steward raced out of the room, leavshocked confusion.

Horner and other male passengers then ran out onto the already-tilting deck to help the youthful, bumbling crew members struggling with the obviously unfamiliar mechanisms of the lifeboats. By the time they were ready to launch them, the ship was listing hard, and the boats were dangling way out from the sides of the ship as they were lowered away. Two of them capsized when they hit the water, spilling the passengers into the sea.

Horner worked to get as many others off the boat as he could in the half-hour it took for the ship to fill and sink. When the water hit the boiler, he was startled by a massive explosion; the greenhorn engineering crew had neglected to release the boiler pressure, and the thermal shock of the icy seawater on the superheated boiler had caused it to rupture, killing several people outright and hurling others into the sea.

The ship soon sank out from beneath Horner's feet, and he spent the entire night shivering in the water, clinging to wreckage. Every few minutes he'd hear a foghorn ring out from the lightship whose warnings the Alaska's officers had apparently ignored as they charged along, supremely confident that they

ing the passengers there in were safely three miles off

The next day, the Portland Morning Oregonian carried a front-page account of the wreck. Reporters followed their usual routine in reporting such stories, looking for the inspiring tales of heroism to balance out the tragedy and interviewing the ship's officers to learn what happened. Second Officer E.D. Dupree must have raised more than one old salt's eyebrows when he blamed the wreck on an "uncharted current" which had supposedly drifted the ship three miles farther shoreward than had been thought, when the first officer praised the engineering crew for keeping steam up so that the lights could stay on all the way up until the time the ship went down — apparently unaware of the connection between that extra convenience and the evening's deadly steam explosion — their jaws must have dropped. The newspaper also had a word or two of praise for the Captain Harry Hobey's "heroic direction of the life-saving," noting that he went down with the ship in grand old maritime style. (It later transpired that he was killed when the funnel fell over on him, probably as a regers, now recovered from their ordeal, were telling of the panicky inexperience shown by the crew, most of whom had obviously never done a lifeboat drill in their short young lives; the rough, rusty and leaky condition of the lifeboats themselves; and the total lack of coordination or management by the ship's

Horner wrote, with considerable bitterness, that he never saw a single ship's officer on the deck where the lifeboats were being launched; everything was left to enterprising passengers and the overwhelmed, demoralized crew. He helped launch boat after boat until the ship sank beneath his feet, but he never even saw one of the ship's officers until he was taken aboard the rescue boat, after about eight hours of shivering in the sea. When he did see them, it was clear from the pristine condition of their clothes and uniforms that they hadn't been doing much hard work that night.

"You wouldn't believe it, but all the officers of the Alaska were in the same condition, didn't even get their shoes wet," he wrote. "How do you suppose they did it? They testified in S.F. that they didn't leave the sinking vessel until all passengers were off ... so you draw your own conclusions."

The federal inspectors, after hearing all the testimony, drew their own conclusions as well, finding all three surviving ship's officers negligent a few days later; however, all were cleared of all charges at their formal hearing the following month.

Reservations now available for 2025 holiday lights at Shore Acres

COOS BAY — From Thanksgiving to New Year's Eve, the gardens at Shore Acres State Park shimmer with hundreds of thousands of colored lights and seasonal decorations, and now is the time to book reservations for the display, which runs from November 27 to December 31 this year.

Holiday Lights has been a tradition for more than 30 years, and it attracts thousands of visitors each year. Due to its popularity, those who wish to park must purchase timed-entry parking tickets in advance to see the lights.

The tickets are available now online at http://Bit.ly/2025holidaylights. The cost is $10, which is the park's standard parking fee. The Friends of Shore Acres manages the event.

Parking time slots are available for 4:30 p.m., 5:30 p.m., 6:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. daily. Each vehicle needs a ticket to park at the event, which includes entry for everyone inside the Ticket is per vehicle not per person. For example, if you have eight people in one vehicle, you only need one ticket. The event switched to timed-entry tickets in 2022, and the move has improved safety and the visitor experience.

Please note that parking on the road is not allowed, and parking outside Shore Acres in other day-use areas, including parking pullouts, is not permitted after dusk because those areas are closed. The $10 fee for parking may be waived (but a reservation is still necessary) if the person making the reservation has one of the following and selects the option during the reservation: 12- or 24-month parking permit; Special access pass for either veterans with service-connected disabilities or foster, guardian and adoptive foster parents of Oregon foster children; Current Oregon State Park camping confirmation for the date of the event visit Oregon Pacific Coast Passport

Reservations also can be made by calling 800-452-5687. Visitors must have reservations prior to arrival.

Visit the Oregon State Parks website for 12 and 24-month parking permit and special access pass information.
