

Sheriff’s office still seeking information on missing man

DOUGLAS COUNTY — The Douglas County Sheriff’s Office continues to investigate the disappearance of a Christmas Valley man whose vehicle was previously located abandoned in the Elliott State Forest, and investigators are again asking for the public’s assistance.

Since the initial report, Douglas County Search and Rescue, along with teams from Josephine, Jackson, Siskiyou, and Klamath counties have conducted supplemental searches in and around the area where the vehicle was found.

Those efforts did not reveal any additional information or result in locating 61-year-old Robert Cotter.

The investigation remains ongoing, and deputies continue to follow up on leads and information related to Cotter’s disappearance. Cotter was last seen on November 2, 2025, and his white 2002 Ford utility pickup was discovered unoccupied on November 30, 2025, on an unmaintained roadway in the Elliott State Forest near Loon Lake.

The Sheriff’s Office is again asking anyone who may have seen Cotter, had contact with him, or observed his vehicle after November 2nd to come forward.

Even information that may seem minor could be helpful to the investigation. Please call (541) 440-4471 and reference Douglas County Sheriff’s Office case #25-4113.

In addition to the agencies listed above, the Douglas County Sheriff’s Office has received investigative assistance from the Lake County Sheriff’s Office.

Council names Potter new administrator

MYRTLE CREEK – Following an executive session on Tuesday evening, January 6, the Myrtle Creek City Council made an offer to current interim City Administrator Zach Potter to become the new administrator.

Potter accepted the position in principle but the council and Potter will renegotiate the contract for the position.

The offer did come with a caveat that the entire offer was contingent on the passage of the City Charter amendment that will go to voters in the May election.

The amendment is to allow the City Administrator to live within the 97457 zip code.

The charter currently states that the administrator must live within the city limits within six months after being hired.

The council’s position is that it has become increasingly difficult to find quality applicants for any position let alone a city administrator and that by having the ability for those highly qualified applicants to enjoy the beauty of of the area with the opportunity for rural life while still being a part of the community will make the job more appealing in the future.

If the amendment doesn’t pass the council will reassess the position at that time.

Potter has been the interim administrator since August when the council appointed him to the position following Lonnie Rainville’s resignation.

The council did its due diligence and put the position out for applications through December.

Offbeat Oregon History

Governor Charles Martin tried to run Oregon like an Army base

By Finn J.D. John

It was the morning of Oct. 1, 1938, at the ceremonial dedication of the new Oregon state capitol building. Following several dedicatory speeches (including one by President Franklin D. Roosevelt), the ribbon was cut and the crowd outside invited to come inside and have a look.

But as the crowd moved forward, those at the front found themselves up against a door stuck shut. The crowd of Oregonians found itself packed tightly against the door.

Then a voice rang out, strident and harsh and full of authority. It was the governor of Oregon, Major General Charles Henry Martin, and if he'd been in his dress uniform he would probably have had his sword out whacking people with the flat of its blade.

“Get back, you bastards!” he roared.

“It was just like a blowtorch,” former Oregon Senator Mark Hatfield told historian Gary Murrell. “The people fell back.”

This surely wasn't the only case of a governor cursing at his constituents. But it may very well have been the only case of one doing so a month before a hotly contested election, and in the presence of a sitting President of the United States.

But by 1938, General Martin probably felt like cursing at people. In the previous four years, the arrogance and stubbornness that had served him well in the Army and in the U.S. House of Representatives had earned him a bevy of personal enemies working tirelessly for his downfall. His Army life had conditioned him to regard such opposition as insubordination at best (and, at worst, treason), and he reacted to nearly every sign of opposition as if it were an existential threat to democracy. And the gathering clouds of his paranoia were increasingly keeping him out of touch with reality. In the end, he would not win a second term as governor, and President Roosevelt himself would intervene to see to it that he did not.

When Charles F. Martin retired from the United States Army in 1927, he was in his mid-60s and still a vigorous and powerful man. He had no intention of retiring to the Arlington Club to sip drinks by the fireplace and swap war stories. So, after a couple years spent getting his family real-estate development business in order, he put his hat in the ring for Oregon's third Congressional district, against incumbent Franklin Korell, and won.

Martin, as a Congressman, turned out to be remarkably effective. The highlight of his one-term service there was getting the Bonneville Dam built. He and Sen. Charles McNary overcame President Roosevelt's diffidence and Interior Secretary Harold Ickes' active opposition to do get the project green-lighted.

In so doing, though, Martin set in motion the forces that would lead to his downfall, and to the temporary destruction of his political party in Oregon. At the time, there were two opposing philosophies about government power projects like Bonneville. One side saw the dam as a nice source of power for aluminum plants and other power-hungry industries and for private electric utilities, which could buy its power cheap and resell it dear to their customers.

The other side wanted the dam's power to be available to all wholesale buyers, so that they could form public electrical co-ops, buying power from Bonneville and using it to compete with the private utilities.

As for Martin, his loyalties were never in doubt. “The power that the government will develop at Bonneville is not intended to force down the rates of existing power companies,” he said, in 1933. “This power is intended for the great chemical and metallurgical reduction plants whose first consideration is cheap power and an inexhaustible supply.”

Martin's leading political adviser and confidant was none other than former Governor Oswald West. West is mostly remembered today for his youthful idealism as the young state governor who saved the state beaches for public access back in 1913. But by 1930 West had matured into a rather less lovable character — a furtive, mendacious Democratic Party leader who was at the same time a lobbyist for Portland General Electric.

PGE, of course, was delighted at the prospect of buying cheap hydroelectric power from the new Bonneville Dam, but had no intention of voluntarily passing those savings on to its customers.

So PGE must have been quite pleased that the congressman who got Bonneville built was virtually in the pocket of its chief lobbyist.

It would be this fight, as much as or more than his squabbles with labor leaders, that would destroy Martin's legacy as a governor.

Martin was elected to the state's top job in 1934, and almost immediately set about making most of the people who'd voted for him regret having done so. He'd campaigned as a New Deal Democrat, but it quickly became clear that that had been a pose struck to sucker voters into giving him power. He dropped the mask almost immediately. Throughout his term, Martin was a fierce opponent of any government policy that might result in individual citizens getting anything from the government: Social Security, welfare relief, disability relief, the works. In other words, he was the New Deal's fiercest opponent.

In 1936, the unemployment rate having fallen from roughly 20 to 18 percent in the previous year, Martin issued a gubernatorial proclamation declaring the Great Depression over — wishing it away, essentially — and told the federal government to keep its relief funds out of his state.

“There is no need why anyone willing to work cannot find it in this state with crops to be harvested,” he ranted. Oregon was supporting too many “loafers and chiselers,” he said.

“I am trying to teach our people to show the courage and fortitude of good soldiers,” he wrote in 1935. “Democratic nations have lost their moral force through pampering their people.”

When Dust Bowl refugees tried to come to Oregon, he ordered the state relief committee to close down the Roosevelt Transient Camp in Roseburg — he called it a “tramp camp” — and hustle them on their way. He vetoed every attempt at relief for veterans, and when some of them began falling behind on their government-guaranteed home loans, called them “skunks.” He even proposed, in a speech to a group of Young Democrats in Eugene, that 900 developmentally-disabled patients at the Fairview Training Center in Salem should be “put out of their misery.”

“War is the normal state of man, in spite of all the wishful thinking of pacifists,” he said; and in that war, in which only the fittest will survive, society can ill afford to coddle its unfit elements.

This was a philosophy Martin shared with many other military men at that time — including the ones who had seized power in Italy and Germany. Like them, he was not opposed to public spending — just to public spending on relief programs. During his term, the National Guard and State Police never wanted for resources.

And those resources got used. The 1930s were a time of much unrest among unions and labor leaders; federal legislation had recognized unions' right to exist and to strike a few years before. Now, as they started doing so, they seemed to inspire Martin's full paranoia. Perhaps thinking of a labor strike as analogous to a mutiny among soldiers, he saw them as an existential threat to democracy and Western civilization. “The purpose of both (the AFL and the CIO) is the same,” he wrote to a sympathetic fellow military man. “To seize control of the government.”

To counter this threat to democracy, Martin felt that antidemocratic measures were warranted. Martin waged what amounted to a cold civil war in Oregon from 1934 until he was stripped of his power in a bitter primary fight and sent kicking and screaming into retirement in 1938. We'll talk in detail about that cold civil war — the spies, the bribery, the perjury, the attempts to get people fired, and even a case in which a bloodbath was barely avoided — in next week's column.

Days Creek opens league play with victory

DAYS CREEK – Following a two week holiday lay off the Days Creek boys basketball team returned to the hardwood Tuesday night in their league opener as they hosted fellow Douglas County foe Glendale.

The No. 7 ranked Wolves started slow as Glendale took the first quarter 9-8.

Days Creek responded in the second winning the quarter 13-10 to take a slim 21-19 lead at the halfway point.

The game remained close in the third with the Wolves stretching out their lead with a 11-6 quarter win and a 32-25 lead overall.

The fourth quarter proved to be the catalyst for Days Creek as they came out firing. That coupled with tenacious defense saw the Wolves pull away from the Pirates as they won the quarter 27-12 and brought the final score to 59-37.

Leading the offensive charge for Days Creek was Cameron Stufflebeam with a game-high 19 points. Xane Hopkins added 17 points to go with six assists.

Daniel Brown posted a double-double for the Wolves with 10 points and 10 boards.

Glendale saw Kaden France post a double-double as well with 18 points and 10 rebounds. Huntыр Rocha added eight points in the loss.

With the victory the Wolves improved to 8-3 overall while Glendale fell to 3-10.

Next up for Days Creek is a trip to Lowell on Friday, January 9.

Glendale will be at home that night as they host Pacific.

Lady Wolves capsize Pirates in opener

DAYS CREEK – The Days Creek Wolves girls basketball squad didn’t seem to have any rust at all after the extended holiday lay off as they hosted Glendale Tuesday night, January 6, and came away with a 57-39 victory.

Freshman Clara Crume was on fire throughout the contest but especially in the first quarter as she connected on four three-pointers leading the Wolves to a 22-2 advantage after the first eight minutes.

Glendale fought back a bit in the second winning the quarter 14-9 but still trailed Days Creek 31-16.

Crume continued to pour it on as she tied a school record on the night connecting on seven three-pointers.

In the third Days Creek edged out the Pirates 14-12 to increase their lead to 45-28 going into the final eight minutes.

The Wolves took the final quarter 12-11 as they cruised to the 57-39 win.

Crume had a career-high 27 points on the night and just missed a double-double by one as she grabbed nine rebounds.

Maggie Brown posted a triple-double for the Wolves scoring 12 points to go with 12 boards and 10 steals.

Jazmin Estrada also just missed a double-double with 11 caroms and nine points

Audrey Kirkland led the Pirates offensive charge with 23 points and Irelynd Bodine chipped in with 10 points.

Both teams now have four overall victories, bur Days Creek holds the advantage in the Skyline League.

Next up for Days Creek is a Friday night trip to Lowell while Glendale host Pacific.

where it's often harder to find vaccinations, and where vaccine hesitancy rates are also higher.

Pertussis outbreaks occur regionally about every three to five years and do not necessarily follow seasonal patterns. Because of widespread masking and social distancing during the pandemic, Oregon saw only three reported cases of pertussis in 2021, followed by 17 in 2022 and 40 in 2023. Health officials attribute the skyrocketing cases since then to a return to pre-pandemic norms that coincides with waning immunity and decreased vaccination rates.

Why the vaccine matters

Studies show Tdap vaccination during pregnancy is highly effective in preventing pertussis infection and hospitalization. Long-term protection from the pertussis vaccine wanes over time, however, which can create confusion about the vaccine.

“I hear the confusion in my community about pertussis vaccination,” said Benton County Health Officer Carolina Amador, M.D., MPH. “When we use the word ‘booster,’ people may think the vaccine isn’t very effective because protection fades, so they may not want to bother. At the same time, we strongly recommend it for certain people, such as children and pregnant people, because in the short term it does a great job protecting the most vulnerable among us.”

The only way a baby will become infected with pertussis is if they are exposed to someone with pertussis, a bacterial infection that spreads easily through droplets when someone coughs or sneezes.

But pertussis often goes undiagnosed. The illness is tricky to diagnose because not everyone with pertussis will have the trademark “whooping” sound when coughing. For some, pertussis can be severe and result in a trip to the hospital, while others may experience mild symptoms and may not necessarily seek medical care while they still spread disease.

Jennifer Gibbons, N.D., is a naturopathic pediatrician in Portland whose practice attracts many parents who are vaccine hesitant.

“When parents of my little patients also happen to be pregnant, they often tell me their own OBGYN has recommended the Tdap vaccine, and they will ask me, ‘But do you think it’s right for me?’ The answer is always yes,” she said.

“I can say, ‘I’ve seen whooping cough, and its truly awful for infants,’” Gibbons added. “Then I’ll explain how the vaccine merely adds to the suite of protective antibodies that the mother is already providing the baby through the placenta. I’m always exploring ways to change my language with patients to see if I can get them to look at it differently.”

SCENES FROM THE ANNUAL SHAMROCK INVITATIONAL WRESTLING TOURNAMENT HELD IN RIDDLE DECEMBER 30

death in some children.

The current American Academy of Pediatrics Recommended Child and Adolescent Immunization Schedule is based on established vaccine safety and effectiveness evidence. AAP recommendations consider:

When children are most vulnerable to diseases;

When vaccines work best with children’s immune systems;

The safety of vaccinations being recommended;

The risk of diseases in the United States;

Our current access to health care and immunizations; and Cost effectiveness of implementing national recommendations for a particular vaccination.

While the first three concerns are similar across countries, the last three concerns may differ considerably between countries. The AAP-recommended immunization schedule serves as a starting point for discussions between families and their providers, as it always has. Parents should continue to make informed decisions about the vaccines that their children receive based on discussions with their child’s health care provider.

Prior to 2025, AAP had endorsed the CDC recommendations, based on the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices (ACIP), which followed a rigorous review of data on risk of disease and safety of vaccination in the United States. Changes in the newly released recommended immunization schedule are not based on changes in vaccine safety and effectiveness data. The changes were based on a comparison of the number of routine vaccinations recommended in the United States versus select other countries. It did not consider the different conditions in each country. These changes were also not vetted by experts from medical and public health organizations, health care providers, or the public before they were published.

We do not expect these changes to affect insurer coverage for vaccines for this plan year. All child and adolescent immunizations recommended as of Dec. 31, 2025, will remain available and covered by public and private insurers however the changes create confusion and will put more children at risk of preventable diseases.

The West Coast Health Alliance will continue to review available vaccine science and ensure continued access to recommended vaccines. Each state is examining the impact of these federal changes on vaccine access in our respective states. WCHA and AAP continue to support these longstanding recommendations including informed parental decisions for the best protection of their children.

The West Coast Health Alliance was formed to ensure that public health recommendations are guided by science, effectiveness and safety at a time when CDC leadership changes, reduced transparency and the compromise of key advisory panels have called into question the federal government’s capacity to address the nation’s public health challenges.

Food Banks Need Our Help in Responding to Hunger

- *According to the USDA, food insecurity increased by 6 percent in 2023. That is 1 in 7 adults and 1 in 5 children suffer from hunger.
- *The recent inflation has increased food insecurity among families with children and communities of color.
- *Every community in the country is home to families who face hunger. But rural communities are especially hard hit.
- *Many households that experience food insecurity do not qualify for federal nutrition programs and visit their local food banks and other food programs for extra support.
- *In 2024, over 47 million people were living in food insecure households, the highest rate since 2014.
- *Over 750,000 Oregonians saw drastic cuts to grocery budgets and many of these families showed up at food assistance sites.
- *It doesn't take a big commitment to make a big impact towards solving the hunger problem in America.
- *Donate to your local food bank or become a volunteer. Let's work together to solve food insecurity in America and provide everyone with the opportunity to avoid going hungry.
